signed First President of the Republic

PRAHA, Czechoslovakia—(AP)—Czechoslovakia elevated to its presidency Wednesday Eduard Benes, 50, diplomat and disciple of Dr. Thomas G. Masaryk, who resigned Saturday because of advanced age.

Benes, only foreign minister the republic has had since its establishment following the World war, was elected the nation's second president by the National Assembly. He received 340 votes to 24 for Prof. Bohumil Nemec, candidate of the Czech Agrarian party, who withdrew Tuesday.

Benes was opposed by the German student party, Fascists and Right radicals, who cast 76 blank ballots.

Ill-Fated British Peace Plan Hoped to "Save League"

That's Why It Was Attempted, Though It Cost
Hoare Cabinet Post

ETHIOPIAN VICTORY?

Northern Front Victory Is Claimed in Message to Addis Ababa

LONDON, Eng.—(AP)—Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin told the House of Commons Thursday that "the chief responsibility is mine" for the Franco-British peace plan for Italy and Ethiopia.

He said the British government would make no effort to resurrect it.

Plan Is Shelved

GENEVA, Switzerland—(AP)—The council of the League of Nations formally shelved the Franco-British plan for peace between Italy and Ethiopia at a meeting late Thursday.

The project, which created a storm throughout the membership of the League, was sent to the archives by a resolution.

Aimed to Save League

LONDON, Eng.—(Copyright Associated Press.)—Sir Samuel Hoare, who resigned Wednesday night as foreign secretary, told the House of Commons Thursday that it was the fear of a breakdown in the League of Nations, rather than fear of any Italian threat, which motivated the British government's recent foreign policy.

Issue Up to League

GENEVA, Switzerland—(AP)—The League of Nations council, after two hours of secret deliberation, adopted a resolution Thursday placing further efforts toward Italo-Ethiopian conciliation in the hands of a committee of 13—all members of the council, except the parties to the conflict.

Ethiopians Claim Victory

AADIS ABABA, Ethiopia—(AP)—Dedjazmach Ayale, commander of the Ethiopian forces on the west bank of the strategic Takkeze river, reported Thursday that his army had defeated the Italians in a major battle.

His message read:

"I defeated the Italians in a major engagement near Aksum.

"They fled in great disorder, leaving the battlefield strewn with dead.

"I will inform you of the casualties later."

Large Ethiopian forces were moving south Thursday from Sawa Bench and Aniele, on the Somaliland (southern) front.

Hoare Resigns

LONDON, Eng.—(AP)—Sir Samuel Hoare, British foreign secretary, resigned suddenly Wednesday night after the Anglo-French peace plan giving Italy control over two-thirds of Ethiopia proved a swift boomerang.

Ten days after he drew up the plan secretly with Premier Pierre Laval of France, Sir Samuel withdrew from the cabinet and his resignation was immediately accepted by Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin.

Hoare's action came on the eve of a foreign affairs debate in the House of Commons. He had cut short a vacation in Switzerland to go before Commons, much of it hostile Thursday to defend his part in the formula which opponents contended would reward Italy for aggression. It was believed he withdrew to save the cabinet from responsibility for the plan.

Gossip was that Hoare had broken with Prime Minister Baldwin over the day's developments at Geneva. The peace plan virtually was buried and Anthony Eden, British minister for League affairs, did not even defend it.

Several possibilities as to Hoare's successor are listed. Prime Minister Baldwin may assume the post. Neville Chamberlain, now chancellor of the Exchequer might get it; Sir John Simon, home secretary who was succeeded last June as foreign secretary by Hoare, may return to his former post.

Eden may be entrusted with the job.

Labor and Liberal ranks consistently have assailed the government for the plan, which would give Mussolini control of roughly two-thirds of Ethiopia although Italy was indicted by the League of Nations as an aggressor.

The government was accused of an about-face in its hitherto determined stand in the Italo-Ethiopian crisis.

The government left the peace plan to its fate in Geneva and completed preparations for the debate Thursday. Sir Samuel will rise from his seat in Commons as a member of the House and present a "personal explanation" of his resignation. He has represented the Chelsea district of London for a quarter of a century.

The government had planned no defense of its general policy, and acceptance of Sir Samuel's resignation was taken to mean there will be no change in British foreign policy.

"I think it is very clear both houses will pass it," Byrnes said upon returning to his desk after a trip to the Philippine Islands. He was unwilling, however, to designate the type of bonus legislation that would be adopted.

60-Gallon Still Is Taken by Sheriff

Illicit Liquor Outfit Found,
of All Places, Right
Out in Open!

What is believed by Sheriff Jim Boarden to be one of the few remaining stills in the county was captured Thursday morning at the top of a steep hill located about 10 miles south of Hope on the east side of Lewisville road.

It was a 60-gallon capacity still, rigged up complete for a run. Beside it was 500 gallons of mash, and an 80-foot well to furnish the water supply.

Officers have had information on the still for several days. A thorough search of branches and thickets was made in that area, but it could not be located.

Finally officers climbed the hill and found it in the open, the last place suspected for a whiskey still.

At midnight Wednesday Sheriff Boarden, Deputies Reginald Boarden, R. O. Robins, and Revenue Agent Ed VanSickle surrounded the still in hopes of capturing the operators.

Unfortunately for the officers they came upon a herd of mules. Frightened by the intruders, the mules snorted and scampered away, giving warning to the operators who fled.

The noise was so loud that dogs in that vicinity began howling, and from the hilltop scene officers could see lights being turned on in farm homes.

The officers lay in wait until daylight, but no one showed up. Fingerprints on the still were taken and then the still was confiscated and officers returned to town.

NEA Service Staff Correspondent
NEW YORK—Going, going, gone. It isn't an auction. It's the dimes that Frank Woolworth rang up on the original Five and Ten Cent Store cash register.

The Countess Kurt von Haugwitz-Reventlow of Denmark, who used to be Barbara Hutton of New York, is reported to have less than $5,000,000 left of the $40,000,000 fortune which she inherited in 1933 when she was 21. Private railroad trains, castles, and titles come high. The heiress's financial advisers are said to be cautioning her to curtail expenses if she doesn't want to enter middle age without a check book.

Miss Hutton has been selling her property on Long Island. When her lawyers recently disposed of 24 mortgages valued at $32,700, they had to accept discounts ranging from 25 to 60 per cent. Now the heiress has asked that her entire real estate interests be sold although she is retaining all security holdings.

Reports which are being credited say that the Countess has bestowed million after million upon worthy friends in celebration of her coming into her money. She made a single loan of one million. She has been giving her bank orders to care for bills of her friends and others, at the rate of $1,000 a month. Her other dollars were invested pretty much in a pleasure quest.

Her Wealth Gains

Since Barbara Hutton wasn't the world's richest baby the press didn't pay much attention to her in childhood. It merely told the public that she had blue eyes, golden hair, was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin L. Hutton, and heir, at her mother's death, to one-third of the fortune which her grandfather had left when he died in 1919. The complete fortune, estimated at $60,000,000, allotted $20,000,000 to Barbara Hutton, but her father, as guardian of her interests, managed the estate so carefully that the money which he turned over to his daughter 14 years later amounted to $40,856,614.71.

Thereafter, all bars were off. Miss Hutton could spend as she pleased. Not prior to her 21st birthday, though. When she was six, she was allowed an income for maintenance of $7,000 a year. It went up to $12,000 when she was nine, jumped to $35,000 the next year, and reached the $60,000 figure on her 18th birthday. At 18 she filed an affidavit asking permission to spend $120,000 on a private railroad car, as well as $25,000 as a gift for the Hoover Relief Fund.

Magnificent Debut
Then, in 1930, she made a dazzling bow to society at a $50,000 party at the Ritz-Carlton. Silver birch trees were brought from California to convert the ballroom into a forest grove, and an artificial river swung from a blue gauze, electrically starved for the beginning of a make-believe play.

Barbara Hutton became the press's favorite child. It announced that she had been educated, these quiet years, at Miss Hewitt's School in New York and the Farmington School in Connecticut. A train of suitors followed her. She set out to see the world going restlessly, extravagantly from country to country. She reserved half of the liners' deck when she went to sea. She used her own car when on home land. She had a yacht, too.

Hope Friends Attend Kitchens' Funeral

Several Hope and Hempstead county citizens were expected to attend funeral services of J. M. Kitchens, father of Wade Kitchens, to be held at 2 p. m. Thursday from First Baptist church at Waldo.

Dr. and Mrs. J. A. Henry of Hope, close friends of the Kitchenses for many years, were among those to leave Hope Thursday morning.

Mr. Kitchens died at his home at Waldo Thursday night after a long illness. His eight sons will serve as active pallbearers and his 15 grandsons and great-grandsons are honorary pallbearers.

JUST AROUND THE CORNER (her advisors have warned her) may lie a checkbook-less middle age for pleasure-loving Countess Kurt von Haugwitz-Reventlow, unless she sees fit to patch up the money bag through which her once plentiful supply of dollars and dimes has been trickling.

Philadelphian Is Dumped in Ditch by Fleeing Gang

Caleb Milne, 4th, Released
Without Payment
"G" Men Declare

PRISONER IS DAZED

Found Suffering From Ex-posure After 4 Days in Kidnapers' Hands

DOYLESTOWN, Pa.—(Copyright Associated Press)—Caleb Milne, 4th, held four days by kidnapers, was abandoned by his abductors without payment of one cent of the $50,000 ransom they demanded, the Department of Justice announced Thursday.

The 24-year-old grandson of a wealthy retired textile manufacturer of Philadelphia was lured from his New York City apartment late Saturday by a note saying that his grandfather was ill.

Found Beside Ditch
He was found shortly before midnight Wednesday, dazed, doped, and bruised, beside a roadside ditch near here.

Earlier reports said his family was reported to have paid $25,000 ransom to the kidnapers.

State police said he spelled out the name Milne after a gag was removed from his mouth.

The young man was found by three Doylestown young men, Robert Keane, Max Riskin and Lance Smith.

Police Chief James Welsh of Doylestown said: "There's no doubt that's Milne."

He was rushed to the Doylestown Emergency hospital. Physicians said he was suffering from exposure and lack of food.

Police said he apparently had been held captive since he disappeared five days ago from his New York apartment.

Had Been Treated Roughly
S. R. Gerhart, a Philadelphia salesman, stopped his automobile and took the youth to the office of Dr. Bradford Greeb, in Buckingham. He then notified the state highway patrol.

From the lips of the young man, Dr. Greeb stripped layers of adhesive tape. Gerhart cut the rope by which the man's wrists were bound to his knees.

The physician said that Milne mumbled the name "Caleb Milne" several times on his way to the hospital.

Highway patrolmen said that judging by tears in his overcoat, the young man apparently was thrown from a moving car.

Chief Welsh notified Milne's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Caleb Milne Jr., at their mansion in the Germantown section of Philadelphia and federal agents in Philadelphia.

Welsh said the young man had no socks and a shoe on only one foot. Both feet were swollen, he said.

The climax came after a night of futile activity in Philadelphia and vicinity by relatives and federal agents.

Warren Milne, an uncle of the youth, was reported to have attempted to keep a rendezvous with the kidnapers, but failed.

The uncle was reported to have gone to the Bow Creek section of Delaware county, southwest of Philadelphia at 10 p. m., but the kidnapers did not appear.

He was said to have carried $25,000.

The Truth About Diet

By DR. MORRIS FISHER
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

You needn't begrudge your child, or yourself, any candy, if either of you has a sweet tooth. But you should be careful that it does not replace the more important foods in your diet. Candy should be eaten in addition to the essential foods, not in place of them. Too much of such sweet substances will modify the nutrition seriously. Taken after a meal, however, sweets and sugars produce a sensation of satisfaction and do no harm. The desire of the average child for sweets may be simply the natural demand of its cells for carbohydrates, due to fatigue or to the fact that the child's body is growing rapidly. "But you should remember, also, that the child gets most of its carbohydrates from cereals, potatoes, most vegetables, and other important food materials. For years doctors thought that the eating of candy caused decay of the teeth. Candies that are extremely sticky and hard to chew may be bad for teeth and gums. But generally there is considerable doubt that the eating of sugars is in any way related to tooth decay.

Manufacturers of candy have found that 52 per cent of the material used in such sweets is sugar, and the remaining 48 per cent contains gelatin, cornstarch, corn sirup, molasses, nuts, fruits, eggs, butter milk, chocolate, and similar substances. Many dietary experts suggest that we use the least sugar which will produce an acceptable flavor. One specialist points out that sugar creates an appetite, not for other foods, but for itself. The candy eater asks for more candy, not for bread and butter.

When the World War started, the British navy relied on a long left jab and a lot of fancy footwork. It gave up the Nelsonian idea of the knockout punch and adopted a policy of wearing the enemy out by slow pressure. The plan worked—but England came within an inch of losing the war along the way.

You'll find a sharp criticism of this policy by an expert in "Scapa Flow to the Dover Straits," the second volume of the naval memoirs of one of England's greatest living sailors, Admiral of the Fleet Sir Roger Keyes. Sir Roger was all for action, throughout the war, and he says bluntly that Britain could have shortened the war materially if she had used her magnificent fleet as Nelson would have used it.

The Dardanelles, he says, could have been forced in the spring of 1915 if the admiralty had only been bold enough; Jutland could have resulted in the annihilation of the German high seas fleet; if Jellicoe had not feared torpedoes, the submarine menace could have been squelched much earlier; if the fearless offensive spirit had been sufficiently cultivated.

He himself wound up as commander of the famous Dover patrol, and led the spectacular assault which closed Zeerbrug to German submarines—the most daring naval achievement of the war.

He gives a complete account of this exploit, tells how hard it was to persuade moush-bound admirals to use their shiny ships for actual fighting, and presents a fascinating footnote to the tragic history of the war.

Published by Dutton, his book sells for $5.

Your Children
By Olive Roberts Barton

I do not see why people think it is of order to be gay and a bit foolish at Christmas.

Naturally in recent years, when so many were destitute, old Father Christmas sobered up considerably and even those who could afford it felt guilty if they went in for satin instead of good sturdy wool, or took to buying kitchen wear instead of after-dinner coffee cups. Luxury has been considered wicked and in many cases rightly so, but it seems to me that the one time in the year it may be forgiven is Christmas.

It used to be the custom to give needy children mittens and underwear from Santa Claus via the Guild that so conscientiously packed boxes for the orphans. Now, although these are still important, few boxes are nailed up for their destination without some jolly gifts as well. Toy missions saw the need long ago. "Indeed the whole country has concentrated on the toy for the underprivileged child."

Grown-Ups Need Toys, Too. This being the case, is it not necessary for grown-ups to have their "toys" too? I don't think that Laura needs to feel wicked if she buys Jim a box of cigars instead of the socks he needs so much, or if Jim gets Laura perfume instead of the ash-can she spoke about.

Now we come to money. There are two ways of giving money for Christmas: one is a hit and a song. The other the prosaic thing on earth. When dad tucks a ten-dollar bill in Betty's stocking and says, "Spend it any way you like. It's yours," that is one thing; but for him to warn her that it is to add to her bank account of twenty dollars that he started for her in August, that is another.

Yet it may be that Betty has already been conditioned to think that money, as such, is the finest present in the world. She might prefer to save it for a rainy day.

While this is an excellent idea in one way, the "Betties" I think will, in time, lose the ability to experience the fun of a little spending. They will develop inhibitions and frustrations. Living for the Coin, Not By It. I knew a family like that. The children were conditioned almost in babyhood to love a silver dollar. Their birthday presents, rewards and Christmas gifts were eternally in money. They saved it all. The parents were well-to-do and there was no need of hoarding or living a life completely bounded by the middle edge on a coin. They grew up as mercenary-minded family as can be found between oceans.

The other extreme is just as bad. Extravagance needs no diatribe here. We all know that thrift is a basis of character.

Economically, what the country needs just now is a bit more spending by those who can. Sentimentally we need some jollity and the not-too-calculating gift. Employment depends on the sale of goods, or candy as well as the tea-kettle and union-suit. A little mixture is a good idea. To go fifty-fifty with the bill in the stocking. To buy Joan goloshes if she needs them but also some gay little trifles as well. In fact we need Christmas this year, and need it badly.

Glorifying Yourself
By Alicia Hart

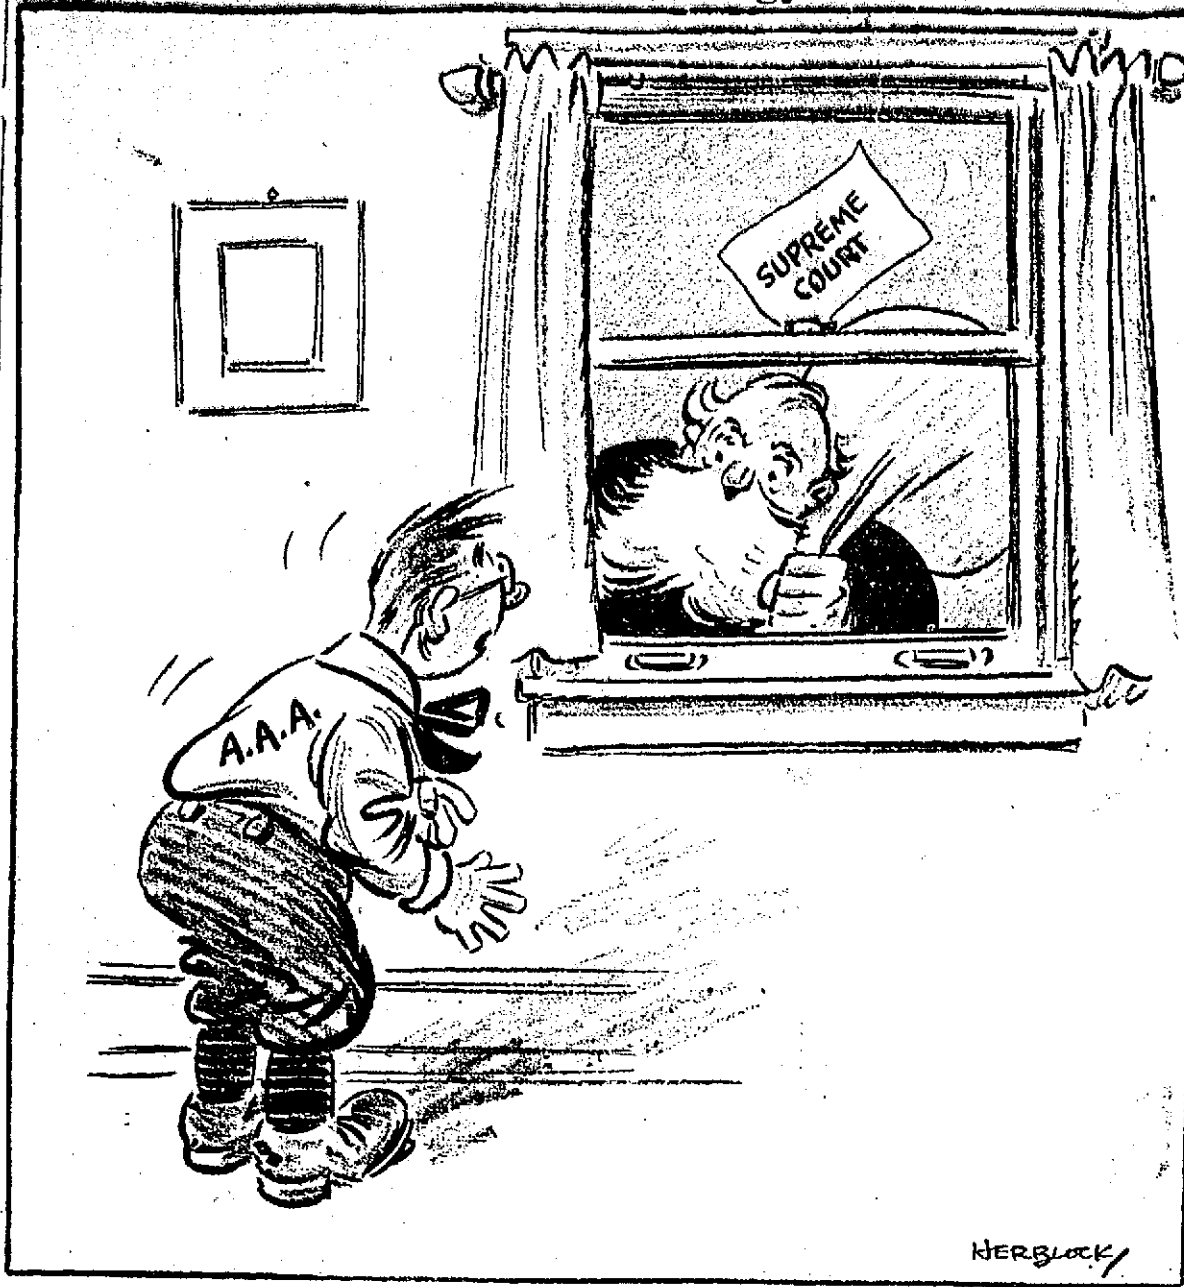

She may wear only powder, rouge and lipstick during the day, but at night—and especially for Christmas parties—the average woman knows that there is flattery in eye makeup. Mascara, correctly applied, makes eyelashes look longer and more luxurious and enhances the beauty of the eyes themselves. Generally speaking, you ought to pick brown or black, depending on the natural color of your lashes. However, certain new blues and East Indian wines are attractive, particularly if lights in the ballroom are a decided amber.

When you have finished putting on powder, dip the mascara brush in water (be sure to use plenty of water—too little is the cause of smudges and smears), then whisk it lightly across the cake of mascara. Opening your eyes wide, use upward strokes to cover every lash. See that each one is coated with one stroke of the brush. Don't apply a second layer. If any spills over on the skin around your eyes, remove it immediately with a bit of cleansing cream.

If you use eyeshadow, remember that it ought to match the natural coloring of your eyelids and should be put on before you powder. Brush your forefinger lightly across a speck of cleansing cream before you dip it in the paste. Cover only the upper lid. Don't extend it outward on your cheeks. Blend it carefully upward to eyebrows.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
Forces are at work that threaten the happiness of lovely DANA STANLEY and her attractive husband, DR. SCOTT STANLEY, a struggling young physician.

Dana's grandmother, who had hoped she would marry a rich man, is now a widow. She is now a widow. She is now a widow.

Now GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXVI

HOPD had burned high when Dana and Scott flung their challenge at destiny by standing before a minister and promising, in singling tones, "for better, for worse."

Dana told herself that things must surely grow better soon. For of course they couldn't be worse. The problem of living without a bank account seemed absolutely unsolvable.

It was bad enough, Scott said, to allow Dana to make petty adjustments during the first few months of their marriage. But the time came when even petty adjustments weren't enough. More rigid economies faced them.

Opportunity appeared to be knocking at Scott's door when Dr. Morton decided to leave the city. Dr. Morton's suite was in a building that housed 10 of the city's outstanding physicians.

The rental of Dr. Morton's suite was considerably more than the cost of the extremely simple quarters Scott was occupying. But Scott knew the value of having his office in the more exclusive building. Then, too, he would have the use of X-ray equipment, an indispensable adjunct.

Scott moved. His new office adjoined that of Dr. Osborne, dean of the city's surgeons. But, though the reception room always had its quota of patients waiting to see Dr. Stanley, they were not the type to swell a deflated cash box. Most of them had known Scott's father. Most of them owed his father money. And most of them would owe Scott money from now on.

But what could he do? If a mother brought in her small son, and an infected appendix was revealed, there was nothing to do but take it out. Or maybe the patient was a pale little girl with a bad cough. There must be a careful examination to discover the trouble.

Every doctor, Scott knew, had a percentage of patients who couldn't pay. That was one of the hazards of the profession. But the equation was usually balanced by a number who were able to pay, and did pay, for skillful medical treatment.

SCOTT moved into the new quarters with a sinking feeling in his heart. It was feeling the wisest step of his career but, at the moment, it was a costly experiment that meant revising a budget which had already undergone more revision than a normal budget would stand.

He groaned at the thought of asking Dana to cut expenses further when she had faced so many problems of adjustments with such a gallant spirit.

It wasn't fair to ask her to eliminate the modest entertainment fund altogether. That would mean staying cooped up at home. Or, rather, staying in that "darned little apartment." The place was beginning to get on Scott's nerves.

He longed to be back in a house like his own, where he could really stretch out. He had a suspicion that the close, heated atmosphere was bad for Dana. She was looking pale lately. The thought was another to worry him sorely. And there was that business of confessing to her that the more expensive office would put another crimp in their mode of living.

Scott was discouraged, moreover, because so far the move had not brought him a single patient he had not had before. Dr. Osborne had been the first of the doctors to come in and glance about Scott's immaculate quarters. Dr. Osborne had given him a hearty welcome and then had apparently forgotten all about him.

He needn't have worried about breaking the news to Dana. Her intuition was positively uncanny these days.

SHE said one night: "I'm simply sick of partying, Scott. Don't you think we might stay home some for a change? We've paid all of our obligations. I think we should rest on our laurels for awhile."

It was Dana who decided to send back the new brown coat with the warm and flattering fur collar.

"Those sleeves are so exaggerated," she said. "They will be completely out of style next season. And who wants a coat that isn't good for two years?"

"But I thought you liked that coat," Scott said.

"I've changed my mind. I don't like it at all."

"Be sure you get another one," Scott said firmly.

"I intend to when I see something I like," Dana replied lightly. Somehow the time flew by and Dana couldn't seem to find the right coat. "Honestly, Scott, the more I see of the new coats, the more satisfied I am with my old one," she told him. "The styles are dreadful on me. Of course I bought mine in Paris and it was a lovely material."

At the stair landing, she stopped and flung upward at him, her eyes cold and unforgiving: "Dana seems to think being married is some excuse for being a martyr. I wish you'd talk some sense into her."

Scott fitted his key into the lock soberly.

So the old lady thought he was taking all the shine and sparkle out of life for Dana. Well, maybe she was right, at that.

Politics in Relief Flayed by Hoover

Ex-President Would Decentralize and Reduce Spending Campaign

ST. LOUIS, Mo. — (P) — Herbert Hoover's slashing attack here Monday night on the New Deal relief policies threw before the nation Tuesday the Hoover plan of decentralized relief based on "the voluntary services of American men and women."

The former president suggested a plan to decentralize relief control, cut government allotments to states by more than half and "relieve human distress which suffers enough without the poison of politics in its bread."

He said "people on relief have suffered enough from having playboys take America apart to see how the wheels go round."

Addressing the John Marshall Republican Club of St. Louis, Hoover Monday night singled out for a torrent of sarcasm Roosevelt's Atlanta remark two weeks ago that "the mechanics of civilization came to a dead stop on March 3, 1933."

He said the depression was turned back throughout the world in June and July, 1932, but that the New Deal caused this country to lag for two years while other nations progressed.

Roosevelt made a $2,500,000,000 "error," Hoover said in estimating the New Deal's public debt commitments, and took credit for $2,200,000,000 of recoverable assets loaned out by the Hoover regime. He predicted the public debt would rise to 32 or 33 billion by next July.

Hoover blamed the 1933 bank panic on hysteria induced among bank depositors by the incoming administration.

"The inevitable and driving purpose of any bureaucracy," he said, "is to use its powers to secure its jobs. The sudden appropriations to cities, counties and states were singularly timed to elections. And this is not the only method of making politics out of human misery."

"When in the face of a decrease in the unemployed, the cost of relief rises from $1,100,000,000 to an appropriation of $4,800,000,000 in a single year, it is certainly reason for searching inquiry. Every community has been forced to become a conspiracy to get their share from the federal grab bag."

Reviews Relief Costs Hoover said the cost of relief in the last year of his stewardship to federal, state, county, city and private agencies was about $1,100,000,000. The federal cost alone, he said, was not more than $250,000,000 and the number of government employees fewer than 200.

For the year ending last October the federal, state and local cost aggregated $2,500,000,000, he said, with 140,000 officials on the federal pay rolls drawing about $300,000,000 a year.

"It is easy," Hoover said, "to detect another $200,000,000 in pencils, typewriters, offices, automobiles, pullman fares, etc., not to mention press releases."

Guessing Time

It's guessing time at our house, every evening after tea. We start guessing what old Santa's going to leave us on our tree. Everyone of us holds secrets that the others try to steal. And that eyes and lips are plainly having trouble to conceal. Guess what you will get for Christmas "is the cry that starts the fun and we answer, "Give the letter with which the name's begun." Oh, the eyes that dance around us and the joyous faces there. Keeping us nightly guessing wildly: "Is it something I can wear?" It's guessing time at our house, and the fun is running fast. And I wish somehow this contest of delight could always last. But, soon as this is over, when the tree is bare and plain, We shall start in looking forward to the time to guess again.—E. A. G.

Mrs. M. B. Smithy Buried Here Sunday

Former Hope Woman, Who Died in Texarkana, Is Brought Home

Funeral services for Mrs. Mattie Belle Smithy, 75, of Texarkana, formerly of Hope, were held from First Presbyterian church here Sunday afternoon. The funeral was conducted by the Rev. Thomas Brewster, pastor, and the Rev. S. Z. Brown, pastor of First Presbyterian church of Texarkana. Burial was in Rose Hill cemetery.

Mrs. Smithy is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Mabel Blakeney of Texarkana. Mrs. Smithy and Mrs. Blakeney were residents of Hope from 1906 to 1927. Mrs. Blakeney was manager of the telephone company here at that time.

Serving as pallbearers were: Henry Taylor, Sid Bundy, Charles Taylor, Dorsey McRae, Tom Ruggles and Jake Beckworth.

Barbara Hutton

strange and black—for water ways. She met Prince Alexis of Moldavia one day. He was tall, handsome, charming, with a love of gold and polo ponies. His father, the late Prince Zachary, had been a member of the Russian Imperial Court and aide-de-camp to the Czar. Prince Alexis had recently been married to, and divorced from, Louise Astor Van Alen, a direct descendant of John Jacob Astor and daughter of the wealthy Mr. and Mrs. James Lauren Van Alen.

Barbara Hutton continued her carefree way around the world. Prince Alexis followed her. He proposed and proposed. Finally, in Siam, she accepted him. She came back to Paris to meet her family and to prepare for the wedding. She bought 100 costumes, 100 pairs of gloves, 50 bags, one coat that cost $4575 and an ermine wrap valued at $5999. Cosmetics for her (trousseau) took another $200, and lingerie cos. $500. Four street pocket-books at $80 each were another necessity. Her trousseau cost $50,000.

She married her debonair prince at the Russian Church in Paris, June 15, 1933. The vicar ceremony, necessary under the French law, was observed first.

Pays Off Prince
Under a contract with Prince Moldavi, Miss Hutton retained complete control of her fortune but a large settlement was made on him. Now, the heiress's spending reached the peak of depression extravagance. She and the prince continued their gilded travels. They bought the San Gregorio Palace on the Grand Canal in Venice for a summer home.

They returned to Paris in the autumn of 1934 and in November when the Princess Moldavi was 22 years old, she gave a $10,000 party at the Ritz. An orchestra was brought from London by plane. The program included dinner, champagne and dancing. Among the 120 guests were some princes, a duchess, three barons, 12 counts, a lord and two baronets. The titled assemblage broke up at four o'clock in the morning.

The next startling information came from London. Rumors suggested that there was a rift between the prince with a title and the girl with a check-book. She began to write poetry. He doubted his polo interests. Barbara Hutton obtained a divorce at Reno on May 13th, 1935.

Then she bought another title. She drew a count this time.

New Husband is Rich
Count Kurt von Haugwitz-Reventlow, fairly wealthy in his own right, didn't need to go to business hunting. He married Miss Hutton immediately upon her divorce and took her to Europe where his family castle stands in the center of meadows of contented cows. His estate is a rich dairy farm.

When she married her first prince, Miss Hutton's annual income for maintenance was $300,000, which her father had raised to $400,000. Interest on her invested $40,000,000 yielded another $2,000,000 yearly. Now her financial status is so changed she has to sell her houses and lands.

Meantime, Prince Alexis, who was killed in a motor car accident in Spain last summer, left her a couple and one-fifth of his $5,000,000 estate. The money may prove as welcome as the title once was, it appears.

The Woolworth heiress, it seems has been too careless with the coins that her grandfather's sales force collected. Maybe, though, John D. Rockefeller is the only millionaire who can hand out dimes and stay rich.

All the oceans in the world combined contain 227,672,000 cubic miles of water; one cubic mile contains more than 1,100,000,000 gallons.

The Tower of London cost approximately $100,000 to maintain during 1934, while receipts from admission fees and guide-book sales totaled $90,000.

Thelma Todd Rose Far in Decade

The death of Thelma Todd at the pinnacle of her screen career wrote a tragic climax to the typical Hollywood success story—the bathing beauty winner's rise to stardom and the Hollywood metamorphosis revealed in these four pictures. In 1925 Miss Todd won a lodge beauty prize in Lowell, Mass., attracted the notice of a film scout, was given minor parts, then featured roles and by 1928 was rated high as a comedienne. She was a recognized star by 1931. When stricken by death, she had just signed a contract calling for more than $100,000 a year.

Wedding Rings Are Given Up for War

Melted Down for Gold to Finance Italy's Ethiopian Campaign

ROME, Italy.—(AP)—Millions of women, massed under drizzling skies throughout Italy, were led to Queen Elena Wednesday in giving up their wedding rings to the Fascist regime. The gold bands were replaced by the government with steel rings.

Mussolini's wife, Donna Rachele Mussolini, marched at the head of her women neighbors and followed the queen in casting the rings of her husband and herself into an urn. Long after dark, thousands of women stood in line here and in other large cities, waiting to offer their wedding bands.

Some 8,000,000 women and 2,000,000 men who also wear wedding rings were estimated roughly to have given up 1,000,000,000 lire, or $800,000,000 in gold to the cause.

The tall, black-garbed Montenegrin queen, speaking in a high vibrant voice, near the breaking point, cast the royal marriage bands into the middle of three urns on which rose incense before the altar to the Unknown Soldier in Rome.

The queen called the rings "symbols of our first joys and extreme remuneration in these purest offerings to the country."

Crowd of 100 Out for Mat Program

Rhodes and McCoy Donate Services for an Exhibition Bout

Approximately 100 fans witnessed the amateur boxing and wrestling show Wednesday night at Fair Park, plus and exhibition of wrestling by Dusty Rhodes of Hope and Mickey McCoy of Shreveport.

Both are former professional grapplers. It was announced from the ring that each was donating his services for the exhibition bout.

Rhodes took two out of three falls to win the match. He pinned McCoy in the first six minutes, and took the third and deciding fall in four minutes.

Rhodes used science and speed to offset rough tactics employed by the Shreveport matman. The crowd was pleased with the match.

In the amateur division, Newton Seacrest, Hope Star newswriter, showed greater strength in bowling over Fred Briant. Seacrest took two out of three falls in less than twenty minutes. In two previous matches the two amateurs fought to a draw.

Doc Zimmerman and Glenn Parker, both weighing around 150 pounds, wrestled to a draw in a 30-minute match. Both gained a fall.

When Blondy Jones, Shreveport amateur boxing champion failed to show up, Bert Mauldin was substituted and fought a three-round draw with George Womack of Hope.

A battle royal between five Hope negroes opened the show, providing much entertainment for fight fans.

Due to next Wednesday falling on Christmas Day, Promoter Mauldin said that the weekly show would be held Monday night, December 23.

The card will be announced Friday.

Austin Blackwell, Marine in Orient

Member of Peiping Legion Guard Qualifies as Machine-Gunner

Austin G. Blackwell, 21, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Blackwell, residing at 621 South Washington street, Hope, enlisted in the Marine Corps at Peiping, China, on March 10, 1933. Private Blackwell was sent to the Marine Corps Base, San Diego, Cal., for his preliminary training, after which he was eligible for transfer to station, sea, or foreign shore duty. Choosing sea duty he was transferred to the Sea School for instruction and then to the USS Colorado. After a tour of duty aboard the USS Colorado he then desiring other foreign duty arrived in Peiping, China, in May, 1935. By route he was tabbed to visit the Hawaiian Islands, Guam, M. I., and the Philippine Islands. The primary purpose of the embassy guard is to protect the American Embassy. To accomplish this mission in times of emergency it is necessary to have men with a steady eye and a cool nerve to fire the Machine Guns. Private Blackwell has satisfactorily passed the required tests in Machine gunnery and has been named a machine gunner.

Since arriving at Peiping, China, he has been able to visit the world's oldest historical city. He has visited the Chinese summer and winter palaces, the Great Wall, Ming Tombs, Temple of Heaven and many other interesting historical places.

Wasson Opposes Bond Board Plea

Appeal to U. S. Supreme Court Ill-Advised, Is Minority View

LITTLE ROCK—State Bank Commissioner Marion Wasson, a member of the State Refunding Board, sent a letter to other members of the board yesterday suggesting that the board abandon its plans to appeal the decision of a three-judge federal court handed down Wednesday, enjoining the board from purchasing road district "B" bonds to the exclusion of "A" bonds offered at a comparative vice.

Mr. Wasson wrote in part as follows: "It is possible that circumstances in the future might make necessary some changes in Act 11 and I doubt the wisdom of appealing this case to the Supreme Court of the United States for the reason that if the decree should be upheld the state could never amend or change Act 11 in any way."

"I also wish to call your attention to the fact that the price of bonds has increased since the last tender and the long delay pending the final decision by the supreme court would work a further injury to the state by interfering with the tenders which are expected to be called for early next year."

WE DRIVERS

A Series of Brief Discussions on Driving, Dedicated to the Safety, Comfort and Pleasure of the Motoring Public, Prepared by General Motors

No. 6—POWER AND SPEED

Most of our motor cars will go so much faster than we ever care to drive them, that no doubt people often wonder why so much speed is built into them in the first place. Of course, automobiles aren't built with the idea of pleasing the manufacturer or the engineer or the salesman. They're built to suit the men and women who are going to own and drive them. And there are certain things that people do insist on in their cars. I happen to think that some of these things are of such nature that when the engineers provide them, an ability to go fast just naturally results.

For instance, nearly everybody likes to get going as promptly as possible. Now that's just a matter of the power we have in our engine and how our car is geared.

Then there's the business of hill-climbing. That may not mean as much in some localities as in others, but cars have to be built to suit us whether we live in Maine or Florida, Iowa or California—wherever we may live and wherever we may want to go.

Engineers tell us that they could build a fairly low-powered car that would pull us up the steepest hill. But if they did, they would have to gear it so low that when we got over the top and onto a level stretch, we could only go crawling along at a rate that wouldn't satisfy even the most conservative drivers.

But perhaps the most important reason for having our power what it is in modern cars, is a matter that many of us have never considered. We all know what happens to us when we ourselves are going at high pressure all the time, either physically or mentally. A person can work 12, 14 or 16 hours a day, but we know we get along best when we don't tax our last reserves of energy all the time.

In the same way, anybody who has ever run machinery knows that if you keep it going at full capacity and full speed day-in-and-day-out, you're just multiplying the chances of a breakdown, sooner or later.

And that's how it is with a car. By building in the ability to run at high speed, engineers make it practical to run at reasonable speed. If our car can go seventy, eighty or ninety miles an hour, then it won't have to strain to go thirty-five, forty, or somewhat faster if circumstances demand. So we can drive it along at sensible speeds hour after hour, day after day, without over-working it.

When we stop to think about it, lots of things are built with that added safety margin. Elevators in our office buildings could carry far heavier loads than the weight of all the people they can hold. So could modern bridges. The steel girders of our buildings, the rails under our trains—in fact, any number of things we depend on day-by-day—are much stronger than they really have to be. They all have that extra margin of protection.

So with our cars, what we have to remember is that speed is simply a by-product of power. We can use that power wisely, or we can use it sensibly and get better performance and dependability as the result. Manufacturers can't decide that. It's all up to us.

New Relief Faces Create a Problem

Situation Aggravated by Approaching Winter, Says Harry Hopkins

WASHINGTON—(AP)—A new relief problem—helping the jobless who are seeking relief this winter for the first time—Wednesday brought forecasts of a new demand for a return of the federal dole.

Harry L. Hopkins, WPA administrator, reported that it had become "apparent that in many cities the depletion of individual resources, aggravated by the growing winter need, adversely affected the relief situation" during October and November.

After noting a "sharp expansion" of the $1,000,000,000 work relief program in November, Hopkins said that the number of families and single persons on relief in large cities at the end of that month was 9.4 per cent smaller than a month before. He said that in 42 of the 145 cities covered in the report, the decline was 5 per cent or less, while the relief load increased in 27 others.

Hopkins held a luncheon conference with President Roosevelt, presumably to discuss need for relief funds beyond the $500,000,000 to be asked of Congress for permanent public works.

The president's statement Tuesday that he would ask his sum for specific projects was followed by hints that the $900,000,000 the administration expects to have left over from the present fund might be enough to provide for the needy from July 1 until the following January. It was intimated that the administration thus might ask a comparatively small additional relief fund, with the exception of $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 for Civilian Conservation Corps.

Disloyal Generals Ousted in Mexico

Foreshadows Struggle Between Government and Plutarco Calles

MEXICO CITY, Mexico.—(AP)—President Lazaro Cardenas struck swiftly Sunday to gain the upper hand over the newly returned Plutarco Elias Calles in what appeared to be a rapidly approaching showdown over whether the president or the erstwhile "iron man" will rule Mexico.

Cardenas announced the dismissals of Gen. Medina Yezia as chief of the military zone of the Valley of Mexico and Gen. Joaquin Amaro as director of the National Military School. Thus, observers said, the president balked any possibility of an immediate military coup against the government.

The two generals, like five senators expelled Saturday on charges of "sedition and rebellious" activities, were among the strongest supporters of President Calles.

Accusations against the expelled senators said the government had learned "a conspiracy is being carried on against the government by those whose political interests were injured by the breaking off of relationship between Calles and the government."

Blumenfeld Named as Liggett Slayer

Eye-Witness Identifies Same Man Named by Liggett's Widow

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn.—Bolstering the widow's statement that Isador (Kid Cann) Blumenfeld is the man who murdered her husband, Walter Liggett, a witness to the shooting Monday identified Cann as the gunman who poured five machine bullets into the editor's body in the rear of his apartment last Monday night.

The witness is Wesley Andersch, member of a well known Minneapolis family.

Andersch signed a statement late Monday accusing Cann. Previously he had been questioned by investigators.

The witness who saw the shooting while standing only a few feet from the gunman's car in the alley where the shooting occurred, knows Cann well. He said he and Cann were fellow workhouse inmates about a year ago.

Treasury Buying

begin two years ago dropped $31,755,975.

Despite this tremendous paper loss on metal the price of which it has been trying to force upward, dispatches from London, New York and other silver markets indicated that Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau was accepting defeat as inevitable and giving no support to the market.

Although brokers in London frantically sought to keep at least some semblance of order in the demoralized market by setting a price of 23 pence (51.06 cents in American money) there were no takers. Even this ineffective and arbitrary price represented a decline of about 4.17 cents an ounce from Tuesday's price.

In New York, Handy & Harmon, the bullion firm which daily fixes a price on silver regarded as "official" by brokers and the metal trades, quoted her silver at 53 3/4 cents. This was a drop of three cents for the day in New York and was nearly 10 cents lower than the 65 5/8 cents at which silver was pegged with Treasury support from August 26 to December 9.

Based on the 4.17 cents drop Wednesday in the London market, the Treasury's paper loss for the day on the 761,774,000 ounces that it has bought at pegged prices since December 21, 1935, was $31,755,975. Based on New York's quotations, the Treasury's paper loss in the last nine days has been roughly $76,000,000.
